

Schroder ISF* Global Credit Income

Fund Managers: Julien Houdain & Martin Coucke | Fund update: December 2024

Market overview

- Credit spreads on investment grade debt, as measured over government bonds, tightened marginally during December. US investment grade credit was a notable underperformer in December as inflationary pressures and the incoming economic policies of the Trump administration are leading investors to consider more defensive strategies. A combination of low issuance volumes and strong inflows into European investment grade credit saw the market hold up relatively well. In Europe, corporate hybrids and higher yielding issues outperformed, while spreads tightened further on real estate and insurance sector issues. US high yield bonds also underperformed, in contrast to Europe where high yield debt continued its strong performance in 2024 and returned positive performance in December.
- Government bond markets reversed most of the gains achieved in November, with yields rising across the curve. In the US, the Federal Reserve (Fed) cut interest rates for a third consecutive time, bringing the target rate to a range of 4.25% to 4.5%. However, the Fed Chair Jerome Powell cautioned fewer cuts were likely next year due to stubbornly high inflation. The US 10-year yield closed the year at 4.57%, which was 36bps higher than end of November and its highest level since April. Markets began pricing in the decreasing likelihood of another cut in January, as well as the anticipation of inflationary policies from the incoming Republican administration threatening to increase the US fiscal deficit.
- As expected, European Central Bank (ECB) cut interest rates in December to 3% from 3.25%. This was the fourth time this year the ECB made the decision to lower its deposit rate, but the market was disappointed as the tone was less dovish than expected. Concerned with the potential for new US tariffs, among other factors, hampering economic growth, some policymakers had been pushing for 50bp rate cut. The ECB lowered its growth forecast for the Eurozone economy to 1.1% in 2025. Government bond yields rose across European markets in December, with the 10-year German bund yield rising by 28bps to close the year at 2.35%.

- The Bank of England kept interest rates unchanged in December, the decision was heavily influenced by sticky inflation, which saw a rise for the second consecutive month to 2.6%. 10-year gilt yields rose 33bps over the month, while sterling remained steady versus the dollar in December, positioning it to be the top-performing major currency against the dollar in 2024.

Drivers of fund performance

- The Fund posted a negative total return but outperformed its reference index during December.
- The main factor that contributed to performance was the relatively low spread duration of the portfolio in comparison with the reference universe, particularly in the US where credit markets underperformed.
- Credit selection was additive, particularly amongst subordinated financials and banks where further compression in spreads had a positive impact.
- An element of hedged exposure to risk assets, as higher yield securities are particularly sensitive to volatility in equity markets, contributed as the US market sold off from record highs in early December.

Portfolio activity

- Overall portfolio duration remains short relative to the Fund's reference index, although we added back an element of duration in the US and Europe later in the month after bond markets had weakened.
- Consistent with our broad stance on duration, we prefer short-dated credit as valuations on longer-dated securities, particularly in the US investment grade market, offer little upside at current levels.
- The new issue market was relatively quiet in December, and we were highly selective in our participation, as generally available yields were not enticing.
- Our main additions through the primary market included senior secured short-dated debt from a Spanish pharmaceutical group that was priced on an attractive yield. This was a private placement structured as a refinancing of existing short-dated maturities.

- We participated in an issue of short-dated bonds from a REIT focused on the Dubai financial services sector. The issue carries a low loan to value (LTV), while Dubai is growing rapidly as a financial services hub, particularly for wealth management businesses.
- We also increased exposure to corporate hybrid securities, where spread duration is low. In the US dollar market, we added a short-dated, BB-rated issue from a pharmacy chain that is highly liquid and was priced on an attractive yield.
- Disposals were focused on the autos sector, notably European vehicle manufacturers and component suppliers, given the potential impact of US tariffs on exports and the risk of significant spread widening throughout the sector.
- Amongst financials, we took profits on holdings in subordinated insurers and a leading brokerage business.
- After equity markets sold off, with a corresponding impact on higher yield credit, we also removed our portfolio protection which had been placed through an S&P put option.
- all-in yields and steeper yield curves, this should continue to attract inflows into credit.
- However, there is limited room for further spread compression, and we are therefore more cautious on the outlook for longer-dated issues and cyclical sectors. We are focusing on shorter-dated corporate bonds providing an attractive yield with limited spread duration risk.
- We continue to identify opportunities in securitised assets such as agency mortgage-backed securities, which provide an attractive income with less idiosyncratic credit risk. Demand for these securities is also likely to increase given the prospect of a less stringent regulatory environment in the US under the Trump administration, allowing banks to purchase these securities in their portfolios.
- Lastly, we also favour retaining a degree of liquidity. With valuations in most credit sectors at the tighter end of history and policy uncertainty quite high, it is very likely that periods of market volatility will provide the right entry points for establishing new holdings.

Outlook/Positioning

- There is a high degree of uncertainty on the outlook for 2025. The key policies of the incoming Trump administration, including stricter immigration controls, tax cuts, fewer regulations on business, and trade tariffs, suggest a growing inflationary risk. Combined these factors may cause the Fed to cease easing monetary policy earlier than expected. Although it is not our base case scenario, we see growing risk of a ‘no-landing’, in which inflation remains sticky and interest rates may be required to be kept higher for longer.
- Elsewhere, the deteriorating trade environment will amplify existing weakness in the industrial cycles in both China and Europe. We believe more policy support is required to offset this, particularly if we see further signs of a slowdown within the services sectors.
- Looking at the outlook for credit markets, spreads have now tightened to the extent that many sectors of the market, particularly US investment grade and high yield corporate bonds, are trading at narrower spreads than at any time since the pandemic. Nevertheless, we expect credit fundamentals to remain robust in 2025 and combined with elevated

Past performance does not predict future returns. The value of investments and the income from them may go down as well as up and investors may not get back the amount originally invested.

Risk considerations

- ABS and MBS risk: The fund may invest in mortgage or asset-backed securities. The underlying borrowers of these securities may not be able to pay back the full amount that they owe, which may result in losses to the fund.

- Capital risk / distribution policy: As the fund intends to pay dividends regardless of its performance, a dividend may represent a return of part of the amount you invested.
- Contingent convertible bonds: The fund may invest in contingent convertible bonds. A reduction in the financial strength of the issuer of such bonds may result in losses to the fund.
- Counterparty risk: The fund may have contractual agreements with counterparties. If a counterparty is unable to fulfil their obligations, the sum that they owe to the fund may be lost in part or in whole.
- Credit risk: A decline in the financial health of an issuer could cause the value of its bonds to fall or become worthless.
- Currency risk: The fund may lose value as a result of movements in foreign exchange rates.
- Currency risk / hedged shareclass: The hedging of the share class may not be fully effective and residual currency exposure may remain. The cost associated with hedging may impact performance and potential gains may be more limited than for unhedged share classes.
- Derivatives risk: Derivatives may be used to manage the portfolio efficiently. The fund may also materially invest in derivatives including using short selling and leverage techniques with the aim of making a return. A derivative may not perform as expected, may create losses greater than the cost of the derivative and may result in losses to the fund.
- Emerging markets & frontier risk: Emerging markets, and especially frontier markets, generally carry greater political, legal, counterparty, operational and liquidity risk than developed markets.
- High yield bond risk: High yield bonds (normally lower rated or unrated) generally carry greater market, credit and liquidity risk.
- IBOR risk: The transition of the financial markets away from the use of interbank offered rates (IBORs) to alternative reference rates may impact the valuation of certain holdings and disrupt liquidity in certain instruments. This may impact the investment performance of the fund.
- Interest rate risk: The fund may lose value as a direct result of interest rate changes.
- Liquidity risk: In difficult market conditions, the fund may not be able to sell a security for full value or at all. This could affect performance and could cause the fund to defer or suspend redemptions of its shares.
- Market risk: The value of investments can go up and down and an investor may not get back the amount initially invested.
- Operational risk: Operational processes, including those related to the safekeeping of assets, may fail. This may result in losses to the fund.
- Performance risk: Investment objectives express an intended result but there is no guarantee that such a result will be achieved. Depending on market conditions and the macro economic environment, investment objectives may become more difficult to achieve.
- Sustainability risk: The fund has environmental and/or social characteristics. This means it may have limited exposure to some companies, industries or sectors and may forego certain investment opportunities, or dispose of certain holdings, that do not align with its sustainability criteria chosen by the investment manager. The fund may invest in companies that do not reflect the beliefs and values of any particular investor.
